New Native Woodland & Understory Planting

Garden Cottage

Aim: To integrate the restored quarry landform into its wider landscape and visual setting, whilst both enhancing habitat potential for Biodiversity and providing more formal public access into the countryside.

Objectives

- To utilise soils and overburden from the extension area, together with previously placed quarry non-processible materials, to recreate the eastern landform of Dalmahoy Hill.
- To use indigenous soil materials to establish ground conditions for the establishment of species rich grassland habitats.
- To strengthen the south western woodland fringe of Edinburgh with the planting of native woodland structure blocks.
- To integrate the proposed water body around its margins through both the creation of peripheral shallows and running earth slopes into the water to allow the creation of a matrix of linked habitats, to help promote Biodiversity.
- To provide formal multi-use paths / tracks to connect into the local public access network and provide a variety of visual experiences for users.
